

Congressional Internship Application
Washington, DC Office

Thank you for your interest in a congressional internship in my Washington, DC office. As a former political science professor and congressional intern, fellow, and staff member, I believe that a congressional internship is a challenging and rewarding experience that provides a unique insight of how our government really works.

As a congressional intern, you will be involved in many interesting and educational experiences like attending briefings and hearings on Capitol Hill. Internships last about one semester, are unpaid and do not provide housing; however, they are a great way to walk the halls of Congress, experience the way our government operates, and, depending on your university or college, gain college credit all at once. An internship program is not designed strictly for political science or government majors, but it is beneficial to have strong interest in politics, a strong sense of responsibility, enthusiasm, and ability to adapt to a busy work environment.
